THE CROSS ROAD

From the Pastor:

The Women from Snowy River

I remember her as the women from Snowy River. It was a place of dreams more than reality. Perhaps she lived next door to the Walton's; or maybe she had a room in my heart, and I only thought I knew her. You may know her? She lived in an era when the "Katzenjammer Kids" was the first American comic strip. H.G. Wells wrote the "Invisible Man," and artificial light was just beginning to be used to develop pictures. Yet, her world was never anything artificial. She and her family worked the farm, and she knew what it meant to work not just hard, but very hard. Day in and day out, year in and year out, she and her husband planted the garden, milked the cows, repaired the fences, and did the thousand and one things needed. Doing the best they could, standing shoulder to shoulder, they raised their family. She remembered her boys building forts on the hillside of the farm. Their mischief which seemed so important for her to discipline at the time now created memories that brought a smile to her heart. Even though her life had been difficult, she never lost the twinkle in her eye. Her husband saw it, and loved her for it. No matter if she was cooking on the wood stove, or canning vegetables for her family; she kept a song in her heart whose words were spoken through her eyes.

The farmhouse was set high on a brown hill. A windmill used to draw water towered over and next to the house. It was an ever present source of aggravation for her husband because it constantly needed repair. Inside the house, there was a wide pine wooden floor. A table and four chairs set in front of the fieldstone fireplace. Logs were stacked to the left of the fireplace. The mantle above the fireplace displayed a picture of grandfather in his Civil War uniform, some toy dolls from her sister, and a small white stone with her name upon it. Yes, this was life in Snowy River.

But now as she sat in her chair beside the fire; she rocked silently. Years before, her husband and one child died. Her other child moved to California. And yet; she was not by herself. The women from Snowy River knew that God was with her. God was always with her: in her darkest nights, and happiest of days. This assurance of God's presence was causing her to experience God in a deeper and more intimate way than she had ever felt. She breathed in God with new eyes: her rock, fortress, deliverer, and above all as her friend.

We too face challenges, changes, and trials in our life. We too have memories and ideas. We too work hard and stand together. We too seek God's presence. While seeking, we discover that there is a future. The women from Snowy River; perhaps there is some of her in all of us.

Grace and peace, Pastor Gary
